BIRMINGHAM, Alabama (Feb. 6, 2023) – Full-service general construction company Pylon Building Group is creating construction jobs for people in the Birmingham area. Led by President Reggie Torbor, the company recognizes that talent is distributed evenly, but opportunities are not—and Pylon aims to do something about that.

“I’m excited about building a team that can go out and do really, really good work,” Torbor said. “All my life I’ve been on high-functioning teams, and I’m honored to be able to lead one like this. My hope is that our investment in our people will impact their families for generations.”

Pylon launched in January as a wholly owned subsidiary of Brasfield & Gorrie, where Torbor worked as a personal development manager for five years. He previously spent eight years in the NFL. In his new role, Torbor puts an emphasis on bringing together a diverse group of people with unique backgrounds and experiences. He is committed to bringing opportunities and tools for success to the communities where he and his teammates live and work.

“Our hope for Pylon is that it will become a minority-owned, diverse company, and we believe that this diversity will be our strength,” Torbor said. “This idea was born from years of conversations with our minority partners and our desire to create opportunities in our industry in the Birmingham area.”

Construction is underway on Pylon's first project, a restaurant within the Red Mountain Theatre campus.

“We’re committed to reflecting Birmingham’s diversity and we work to ensure that all people are included,” said Red Mountain Theatre Executive Director Keith Cromwell. “It’s important to us that we partner with others who prioritize inclusion. Brasfield & Gorrie is a longtime partner, and when we learned about Pylon’s launch, we jumped at the chance to be their first client. This new company will help further advance diverse representation in Birmingham’s construction market, and we’re thrilled to support that effort.”
